

St. Columba's Episcopal Church Big Bear

A series of testimonials from our congregation.

People sometimes ask me, "Why do you believe in God?", or more specifically, "Why are you Episcopalian?" These are reasonable questions; many people in scientific fields are atheists and some are quite vocal. On the other hand, some denominations want to treat the Bible as if it were a science textbook.

Wise Christians since the time of St. Augustine have realized this was a foolish thing to do. Science and religion are two different ways to seek the truth about the world. Each one tells you things the other cannot. As the famous physicist Werner Heisenberg said, "The first drink from the glass of the natural sciences makes you an atheist, but at the bottom of the glass God is waiting." In the Episcopal Church, we take the Bible seriously, but not literally. The knowledge of God's creation that science provides is accepted and appreciated. By John Varsik
